NOTE: As you can clearly see, Tender Car # 1 was a mistake. The connector bar was intended to fit in the opening at the back of "Big Boy". A second pin, which we mark as Tender Car # 2, has the correct size connector bar. Lion Larry considers it to be a "variation".

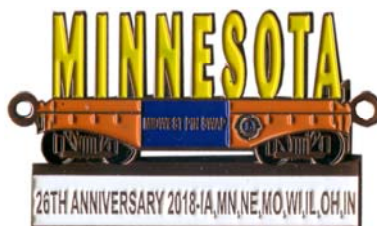

It is interesting to note that the American Locomotive Company manufactured 25 Big Boy locomotives for Union Pacific from 1941 to 1944. The entire fleet of 25 locomotives would cost over 100 million dollars to build today. The Big Boy with its tender car are only 100 feet shorter than a Boeing 747. We understand that it required 48 hours to fire up the Big Boy before it was ready to pull out of the station on a run.

NOTICE

As promised when we published Update No. 13, we intended to issue a supplemental if there were pins that were in the pipeline but not available at the time we provided that update. Accordingly, here are the pins that are now available for trading.

Correction Notes:

The first page in this supplemental issue is actually a page correction. Please substitute the attached page AT-115 for the one you were previously furnished. I have changed the pin numbers for the Leak pins from AT 1117 and AT 1118 to AT 1152 18 and AT 1153 18.

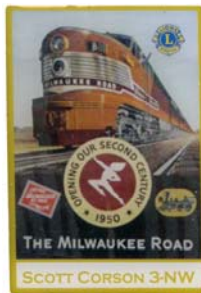

The second page is also a page correction. Please substitute the attached page AT-118 for the one you were previously furnished. Pin AT 1139 18 had an incorrect preface of “PP” rather than “AT”.
