May 2016

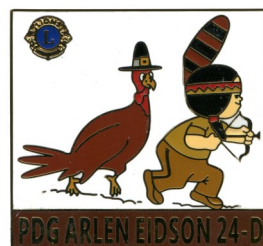

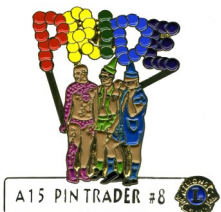

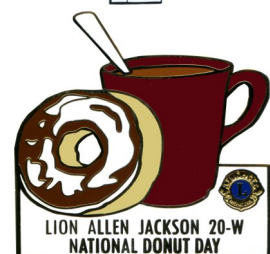

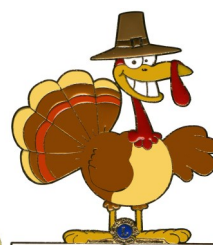

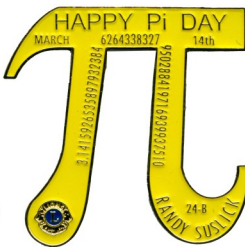

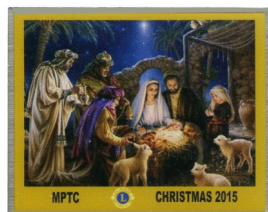

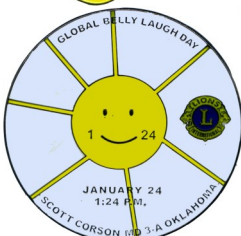

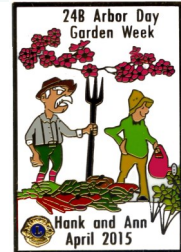

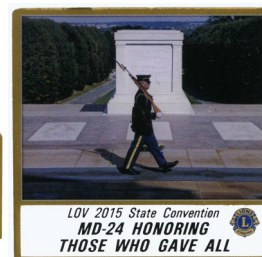

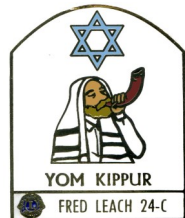

The Holiday Series Final Issue

NOTE: The pins on the first two pages of this final update have been chosen randomly and every effort has been taken to show a fair representation of the holidays that have been honored during the almost two and one half years of the series. All images have been reduced. The most frequent complaint we have received has been the use of a single image in large sets with nothing more than a change in color of an object on each pin. Obviously, the net result is that you have one pin painted 10, 12, 14 different colors. We have purposefully avoided showing them in this review.

World Down Syndrome Day
March 21

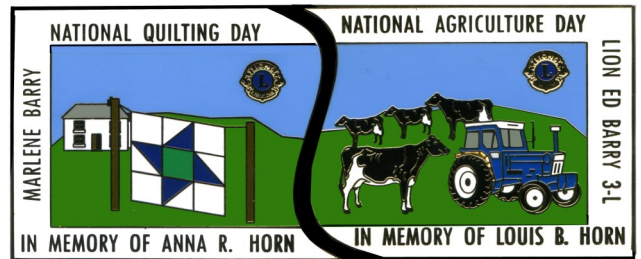

The concept of the World Down Syndrome pin uses interlocking shapes to represent the idea of coming together and community. It is two ribbons that form an abstract flame/person. The flame is part of the Olympic tradition and shows the person throwing their hands in the air in victory. The negative space in the bottom is a tear drop to represent all the hard work, dedication, and emotion people with intellectual disabilities and their families go through on a daily basis. Lion Ed Barry's son, Ben, designed the pin and provides the description. The pin is in honor of Lion Ed's daughter, Hava.
